

Aruruu story

Aruruu was not sure what had just happened. She was in her room just a moment about and now suddenly she found herself in what could be considered a sort of forest, though it was not made out of trees and such like she was used to. She panicked a little bit at first, especially because of all the sounds going on around here.

Looking down she could see things moving, some of those things seemed pretty normal though, people although they were like little bugs to her at the moment. Though those other things that seemed like they were made out of metal were even more curious to her. Blinking she started moving across the street, following one of the larger of these moving metal things.

Her feet clad in brown boots came crashing down on the ground now, easily leaving footprints wherever they landed of course and making the smaller cars bounce up into the air, some of them landing upside down and others landing in... Well other way. She also did not seem to check if there actually were people there so a couple of the poor beings got crushed as well.

A pair of girls that were walking home from school could only let out a loud scream as the brown boot came down... Crash... Splat... And there was nothing left but two stains made out of blood, splattered across the street and some still stuck to the boot of course.

The bus that she was chasing floored it to not get caught, but due to Aruruu's size it actually had no chance getting away from her, in the end it was picked up between two of her fingers. Standing back up she held it in front of her face now, right in front of her giant eye and giving it a good glance.

"What is this...?" She said with her soft voice, which seemed to be a good thing since she didn't blow out the eardrums of any of the smaller people around her at least. She tried to peek inside through the glass of the bus, and she took notice that there were a bunch of small people inside of there as well.

"Oh? You are trapped?" She asked curiously now, wrapping her hand around half of the bus she grabbed onto the other end with the tip of her fingers from her other hand and started tugging a little bit. After a short amount she managed to remove the whole back end of the bus, some unfortunate people stuck in that end however had to hold on, though it did not matter much as Aruruu threw the end piece away thinking it was empty.

Those in the larger end of the bus stared out through the hole that Aruruu had made, screaming and panicking inside but they had nowhere to go. The young giantess kept peeking in through the hole and smiled down at them in the most innocent of ways. "Free now!" She said, turning the bus upside down so they could fall out, not really thinking about the height they were dropping from or anything.

Some of the tiny people falling out of the bus were lucky and landed in spots that seemed to save their lives, most of them did not however and splattered across the ground, on top of other vehicles or even on top of other people that were walking... Or rather running in the streets now trying to get away from the young giantess.

Aruruu placed the remains of the bus on the ground when she saw that everyone was out, not thinking much more about it she went for the other thing that she was curious about. Standing back up she walked over to one of the taller buildings, though since almost all buildings around her were this tall she was unsure which one was the proper tower.

“Stone?” She said to herself, blinking as she poked one of the buildings in front of her, poking it a little bit too hard however, her finger broke straight through the concrete of the building and broke the room inside, an innocent person crushed against the opposite wall as her finger stopped in the most perfect of positions.

Seeing how easily this weird stone building broke she had to try it out again. Walking over to a slightly smaller building she squatted down, her butt covered with the white fabric of her clothing hovering over the smaller people, though she was trying not to fall over.

One hand placed up against her cheek the other one touched and stroked over the building, eventually she grabbed onto the corner of it and started tugging a little bit, almost as if the building was made out of styrofoam it broke without troubles, her eyes going wide for a moment.

“Oh! Interesting...” She trailed off for a moment, peeking into the building that she had made a large hole in now. Though unsure if that was just a weak area she continued to poke and tug around on the building, but of course the results ended up being the same, and when she in the end broke one of the weightbearing areas of the building it fell together completely. She poked her finger through the rubble a little bit, the people that had been in this buried underneath it, those who were not under it had pieces of debris thrown at them from the finger moving around-

Aruruu let out a little giggle, this place was quite interesting for her since it seemed to have a lot of new things, and new things that she assumed were toys. Standing back up she brushed off the front of her outfit now. For now, she actually thought it was some sort of dream, maybe a priestess had put her to sleep and made the experience feel real.

(The end?)